

Greetings from Tyler,

It doesn't seem possible that a week has passed since the last update, until you consider how much more has come to light on a whole range of subjects that figure heavily on the future of the United States. We realize that the following observation paints an unpopular and unpalatable picture that remains largely hidden by the flagships of mainstream news that tend to have the most influence in shaping national opinion. Nonetheless, it is staggering to read the words and listen to the unapologetic speeches of many Whitehouse advisers known as czars calling for the dismantling of capitalism "brick by brick," calling now for government bailouts for newspapers and media outlets that are going bankrupt as the result of their journalistic incompetence, praising third world dictatorships that have seized control of national resources and media... The list of anti-American sentiments and dictatorial hopes and plans of many holding the most influential positions in our nation is simply stupefying.

Not only is the economic system that makes our national freedoms possible under attack at the highest levels, free speech is threatened by a host of proposals including government regulation of media (including the internet), "climate change" schemes and scams, proposed international treaties and regulations that loom at an upcoming international conference in Copenhagen... Former advisor to British PM Margaret Thatcher, Lord Monckton has recently delivered speeches and interviews here in the U.S. outlining some of the plans the UN and the EU have to exert enforcement powers under a proposed international treaty. You should avail yourself of his insight and warning to the United States if possible. You can't help but wonder, at this blinding pace, how long before the whole American notion of liberty, of Constitutional guarantees, is but a fond memory.

Lord Monckton short video

Lord Monckton longer video

His powerpoint presentation for this video

Glenn Beck Interviews Lord Monckton On Climate Treaty Parts 1 & 2

Anyone of adult age will no doubt remember the economically depressed era at the end of the Carter administration into the first year or two of Ronald Reagan's presidency. Interest rates were over twenty percent. Banks weren't loaning, houses weren't selling, businesses weren't hiring. The economic atmosphere hung like a dark cloud overhead. The inflation that led to the ruinous hiking of interest rates was the result of profligate government spending that resulted in an increase in the money supply of around 20%.

The bank/insurance/auto industry bailout/stimulus spending of the past year has increased our national money supply by some 120%! Economic theory and practice is an admittedly complex and dark subject that few seem to fully grasp. But the sheer enormity of current national spending projections, coupled with the obvious concern expressed by our nation's creditors is causing extreme apprehension in many quarters. Trillions of dollars are casually projected to be the cost of "national healthcare", and the mind-boggling bureaucracy it will require. The price tag for Cap and Trade policy is incalculable. More national “change” waits in the wings while the UN and its member nations concoct yet more international laws and agencies with enforcement powers here in the United States.

The future of our dollar is bleak, regardless of politicians’ intentions, purportedly to promote general welfare, help the poor, save the planet or whatever their selling this week. There are warning signs everywhere, with the exception of the mainstream media and occasionally they even creep in there, but only if you’re paying very close attention. We are blessed by one aspect of the information age that has made vast quantities of information available for now, but that may be changing as well if the central planners get their way. No doubt somebody’s political ox will be gored by this characterization of the present reality. We simply cannot close our eyes to the road we’re being driven down, nor the historical precedents of such policies wherever in the world they’ve been implemented.

Europe is in the midst of a change of direction, trying to dig their way out of the socialist quagmire that has kept them economically stagnant over recent decades while the United States prospered. The United States is rapidly embracing policies that have been all but fatal to prosperity in the UK and in Europe.

Iran, the foremost threat to Israel’s survival and to world security including that of the United States, has just allowed UN inspectors to visit the nuclear facility they claimed didn’t exist. According to a report issued by Debkafile last week, “Some sources in Washington take the existence of this hidden plant as evidence that Iran has got several more secret facilities running – and not just for enrichment but possibly even for covertly constructing nuclear bombs and warheads.” Additionally, there is a report that Iran is supplying Syria with “various forms of weapons of mass destruction” including missiles and midget submarines. Syria has been obstinate in its refusal to participate in any U.S. sponsored diplomacy.

Maybe that’s enough worrisome news for now, but unfortunately there is much more to consider. How about the move gaining strength in the United Nations, promoted by dozens of Islamic nations to make it an international crime to criticize anything to do with the teaching or practice of their “religion.” Or is it more a political dogma designed to subjugate every other culture and religion on earth? Uh oh. That just might be a violation!

If you can’t see that every lynchpin of freedom is under attack from “enemies both foreign and domestic,” you must be leading a very sheltered, uninformed life. For better or worse, we’re called to watch and to warn. It’s a depressing task amid so many worrisome, irritating, yea infuriating developments. May God see us through whatever lays in store.

The Garner Ted Armstrong program this week was on the mainstream insistence on the doctrine of the “Trinity”. It brought 403 requests with one hundred thirty four first time contacts.

Thanks for everything you all do to create a warm and peaceful atmosphere in which others can observe the Sabbath.

Have a good one.

Mark Armstrong

Resources and links:

White House Czars

Climate Change

Lord Monckton short video

Lord Monckton longer video